"Ayushprad" | The Science Fest @ Sunbeam School, Bhagwanpur

National Science Day is celebrated in India on 28 February each year to mark the discovery of the Raman effect by Indian physicist Sir Chandrasekhara Venkata Raman on 28 February 1928. It is being celebrated every year to widely spread a message about the significance of scientific applications in the daily life of the people and to give an opportunity to the scientific minded citizens in the country to popularize Science and Technology.

Sunbeam Bhagwanpur commemorated the day by holding a Science Model Exhibition - Ayushprad- My Life My Health. There were around 110 models on the theme-- implications of Science on Health. Most models were working models like ATM machine for medicines on highways, ECG machines, robots for the physically challenged, fitness training machines etc. The fest was inaugurated by Dr. Ashwani Rai, Professor Emeritus CSIR and the Principal Mrs. Gurmeet Kaur & Vice Principal Mrs. Shefali Srivastava. Prof. Rai in his address congratulated the students for their enthusiasm and curiosity to unravel the mysteries of Science. A tableau on Ganga Dolphin, which has become endangered due to rising pollution in the river, caught the visitors' attention, and everyone took a pledge towards its conservation. The theme for this year's National Science Day is 'Science for Nation Building' and in keeping with this, health, the primary factor for a developed nation, was elicited by the students through posters, charts wall magazines all over the venue. It was a great learning experience for the students and we hope that armoured with the right knowledge, our children shall live in a healthier nation.

Essay: Health is more important than Wealth

The adage that "Health is more important than wealth", is age old. Old texts also emphasize the importance of good health and wealth has often been attributed as a harbinger of destruction. Numerous essays have been written and opinions expressed on the same topic. Rather than walking on the conventional road, here is an outline on the impact of health on the three pillars of modern society; Economic, Social and Political.

Economy and economic growth are directly proportional to efficiency. Good health ensures better working capabilities and thus enhanced labor. That in turn improves the returns and boosts up economy. Also for a country like India, where the majority of the population falling in the lower income group is employed as Casual laborer or Manual laborer, health becomes all the more significant.

Social stability and growth cannot be brought about by people who are sunken to the brim in their money! It has been a noticed trend that more the affluence, lesser the connect with the grass root levels. Health here again has more takers than wealth because healthy population would show far more enthusiasm in working for the betterment of the society than an ailing but obscenely rich 'section' of the society. In this context one can always quote the royal families of the yesteryears and the consequent decay and disintegration of the society under them!

Octogenarian politicians in charge of controlling the country are risky and absurd. Here one is pointing to a very eminent oddity; more specifically of a country like India where the demographic dividend is very impressive. Also a known fact remains that money here as well has caused much of destruction. A healthy set of politicians who do not have truckloads of money in their pockets can do much more to the country in terms of development. One may argue that age has enhanced wisdom and experience; but it also has obsolete ideas and frail health which is a dormant time bomb! Dormant but not extinct!

So it is for us to decide whether we wish to be an unhealthy millionaire surviving on a cruel mix of medicines, doctors and diet regimes or a healthy humble person out to chalk a bright future. One must never undermine the value of money especially in modern times but giving it more importance than needed proves to be unhealthy for an individual and ultimately for the society!
